This is a search report done in 1974. Back then, the report form was different, and the Copyright Office included a lot more credit information than they give nowadays, although it really isn't an essential part of determining the copyright status of a film.

The last sentence is a verbose way of saying, "No renewal found."

The Regulations of the Copyright Office prohibit it from giving legal opinions or advice on the validity or status of any copyright other than the facts shown in its records.
